Child Language and Literacy Lab (CHILLL)
Undergraduate Research Opportunities

The Child Language and Literacy Lab is directed by Dr. Shelley Gray. Our projects include investigations of working memory, word learning, and reading processes. We are involved in collaborative research in assessment development, early literacy curriculum development, and professional development for educators.

We are seeking curious, motivated, and dependable undergraduate students to volunteer in our lab assisting project managers and doctoral students in our research efforts. Some research activities occur on campus in the lab; however, we work with children, so most of our data collection occurs off campus at schools and homes. Students may work in the lab or in the field. We provide comprehensive training.

Duties depend on the level of experience and on students’ schedule of availability. You may register for 1 to 3 units per semester, with three hours per week of work required for each unit. We strongly encourage students to be available nine hours per week (3 units) if possible.

Please go to http://chilll.asu.edu to read about our lab and ongoing research projects.

To apply, please email Dr. Gray at Shelley.Gray@asu.edu and send (1) a brief resume, (2) information about why you are interested in our lab, and (3) your schedule of availability Monday through Friday. As long as spots are available, students may begin work any time during the semester, but we encourage you to apply early. We look forward to meeting you! The CHILLL lab is a great place to learn and to make new friends and colleagues!
